A Columnar Boxwood!

Never more than 2 feet wide, this evergreen reaches 9 feet tall!

Plant Patent #15,243. Cultivar name: 'Monroe'.

Just the right size for small spaces, foundation plantings, the entrances to gardens, and other high-visibility areas, Green Tower® is the Boxwood we've been waiting for! Just 2 feet wide but reaching 9 feet tall, this columnar evergreen offers year-round beauty with almost no effort on your part!

The habit of this plant is very dense, yet it keeps its neat, straight-up-and-down shape, as if you'd just finished shearing it! In fact, you never have to do a thing to the foliage, but if you want to shape it, Green Tower® is dense enough to create topiary without leaving unsightly gaps and holes.

The foliage is medium- to fine-textured, giving Green Tower® a full, solid look even from a young age. Expect it to reach about 5 feet tall within 5 years in partial shade. So easy, and so elegant!

Green Tower® would make an ideal privacy hedge, barrier, or accent for the shrub garden, as well as a striking specimen in small areas. It's just the right size for so many garden uses -- definitely an evergreen whose time has come!

Discovered as a sport of Graham Bundy, Green Tower® is certain to become a vital part of your landscape design. Space trees about 30 inches apart for a solid wall of coverage. Zones 5-9.

Tiger Lily Flowers

Perennial, Lilium lancifolium, Hemerocallis Fulva

Most of us refer to the flowers in this picture as an Orange Lily, or a Tiger Lily. But, some people call this Day Lily a "Ditch Lily". It's because this prolific wildflower is commonly found in ditches around a wide area of America.

There is much confusion about Tiger Lilies. An oriental variety is very similar. The major difference is that the oriental Tiger Lily propagates through a bulbs that forms at leaf axils. The common wildflower Tiger Lily is a profuse propagator by means of tuberous roots. Both varieties have edible roots and have been used for medicinal purposes. We will focus the remainder of this article on the wildflower variety.
